HEALTH PAYMENT SYSTEMS WINS HEALTH 2.0 “DESIGN FOR HEALTH” CONTEST

Company recognized by leading market intelligence on new health technologies in health care

MILWAUKEE (Jul. 25, 2017) – Health Payment Systems (HPS) was nationally recognized as the winner of the 2017 Health 2.0 “Design for Health” contest. The Milwaukee-based company’s SuperEOB® solution to simplifying complicated health care billing and insurance benefits was the only winner selected from this year’s 20+ received entries. The contest, hosted by Health 2.0 in conjunction with Mad*Pow, acknowledges those in the health care technology space that offer products and services that improve the experience of health.

HPS’ SuperEOB is a technology-based solution that offers “one statement, one payment, and one place to call.” It consolidates a consumer’s healthcare bills and explanation of benefits into one, well-designed statement, enabling consumers the convenience of making only one payment for all providers on the statement. For health systems who invest in implementing this innovative way of billing, it has been proven to enhance the patient experience by removing confusion regarding healthcare bills and related healthcare claims, while improving the health system’s patient collections and net revenue.

“We are honored to be acknowledged by Health 2.0 in this national health care design contest,” said Terry Rowinski, president and COO, Health Payment Systems. “This award further proves that our service provides a vital and important solution in the health care industry. We mitigate consumer stress and time associated with healthcare expenses, while driving down the healthcare cost trend for the overall market.”

Health 2.0 is the premiere showcase and catalyst for the advancement of new health technologies. Through conferences, code-a-thons and prize challenges, they seek to gather and elevate thought-leaders in the health technology space so that the experience of health care can continue to evolve for the betterment of patients.
